A Big Year for The Project

Sidney R. Rabb (left), principal speaker at the annual meeting, congratulates Eliot Snider, newly-elected chairman of the board.

THE PROJECT, Beth Israel's five-year building program for new and renovated facilities, was the major topic at the hospital's 67th annual meeting held November 7 at the Marriott Hotel in Newton.

Nearly 700 friends of the hospital heard Stanley H. Feldberg, chairman of the Capital Campaign for THE PROJECT, report that pledges and contributions amounting to nearly $8 million—two-thirds of the $12.3 million goal for equity financing—had been received.

In addition to a report on the fiscal status of THE PROJECT, Feldberg summarized its physical status: the Reisman Building taking clear shape atop the Feldberg Building; the addition to the Libby Building—underway and scheduled to be occupied this summer; the opening of the Berenson Emergency Unit's new temporary entrance enabling construction to begin on the Northeast Building; and the October dedication of the Charles A. Dana Research Building, a key element of the overall plan of THE PROJECT and its first completed structure.

"Thanks to adroit and timely planning by the lay and professional leadership of the hospital, to the successful placement of an extraordinary bond issue, and to the consistent support of an enlightened community, we are on or near schedule with all aspects of THE PROJECT," Feldberg said.

In reviewing the events of the year, details of THE PROJECT were also described by Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin, president of Beth Israel, and by Norman B. Leventhal, outgoing chairman of the board (see related articles pages 4 and 6).

Eliot Snider, co-chairman of the annual meeting and newly-elected chairman of the board, introduced the meeting's principal speaker, Sidney R. Rabb, an honorary trustee and former chairman of the board whose ties to Beth Israel span more than half a century.

Annual Report Issue for 1982

Highlights of 1982

• THE PROJECT, a five-year $77.7 million building program for new and renovated facilities, moved forward on many fronts in 1982.

—Gifts to the Capital Campaign from more than 135 families totaled more than $8 million, reaching two-thirds of the hospital's $12.3 million goal for equity financing.

—The Charles A. Dana Research Building was completed as the first part of THE PROJECT and dedicated during a weekend of celebration in October.

—Construction progressed on the Libby Building addition that will house computer medicine; the connecting tunnel that will join the Libby Building with the Yamins Building; and the Reisman Building, the new four-story inpatient structure being built atop the existing Feldberg Building.

—A new temporary entrance to the Berenson Emergency Unit, now relocated in the Yamins Building, was opened, signaling the start of construction on the Northeast Building where the enlarged, renovated Berenson Emergency Unit will be located.

• The office of community relations was established to participate in the development of policies and goals for community relations, identify community needs and trends, and coordinate hospital outreach and planning efforts related to community issues.

• In September, Beth Israel participated in the Fourth Annual Mission Hill Fair, sponsored by the Mission Hill Planning Council.

• The Women's Auxiliary and the Men's Associates co-sponsored "Night and Day '82," a highly successful luncheon and dinner fashion show.

• Robert H. Demling, MD, a well-known surgeon and expert in the care of burns, was appointed director of Boston's Longwood Area Trauma Center, a cooperative program of three major teaching hospitals affiliated with Harvard Medical School—Beth Israel Hospital, Brigham and Women's Hospital, and the Children's Hospital Medical Center.

• Beth Israel staff members published papers documenting major advances in biomedical and clinical research:

—Use of a major new drug, acyclovir, effective against herpes viruses, has in several cases prompted the virus to produce a mutant form of the virus that is resistant to the drug.

—Left-handed people are more likely to suffer from certain immune-system diseases, migraine headaches, and language-oriented learning disabilities than are right-handed people.

—Each year thousands of women are told they have "fibrocystic disease," yet what they have may not be a disease at all, but rather normal breast variations. Furthermore, contrary to common belief, women so diagnosed do not necessarily have an increased risk of developing breast cancer.

—Young cigarette smokers are much more vulnerable to acute respiratory infections such as the common cold than are nonsmokers, and their infections are likely to last longer and be more severe.

• Beth Israel's system of primary nursing received major national attention through extensive coverage in The Sunday New York Times Magazine.

Beth Israel's Patient Entertainment Program (PEP) began its 1982-1983 season with a new format. PEP, a series of professional performances, is now being videotaped at Beth Israel for the pleasure of an audience of patients, visitors, and hospital staff, and aired at future times on Beth Israel's own WBIH-Channel 3. The series is supported by the Harriet Altman Fund for Patient Entertainment of the Women's Auxiliary. Pictured above at a videotaping, Eleanora Lvov, international award-winning pianist.

Excerpts from Remarks by Sidney R. Rabb Beth Israel Annual Meeting November 7, 1982

"Our Hospital is in Good Hands"

What a thrill it is for the folks of my generation to have seen the growth of this great institution, from a small community hospital on Townsend Street in Roxbury to our first Brookline Avenue building now known as the Gryzmish Building—a most significant period marking the beginning of our relationship to the Harvard Medical School in addition to our earlier Tufts teaching program. It was then that Albert Ginzberg and Louis Kirstein and A.C. Ratshesky, three of our leading citizens, joined forces to make the superb choice of Dr. Charles Wilinsky to become the general director.

It was my privilege to be present at the dinner which launched the $1 million campaign of 1928 to finance the construction of that building. Who then would have visualized the many critical situations which faced us almost immediately: the Great Depression, our inability to pay interest on our mortgage, the many sacrifices that so many doctors made of their time and effort to build the kind of standards that made us an equal member of the Harvard-Longwood Medical Complex and finally a happier event— the drive to pay off our mortgage.

There are several here today who are the children and the grandchildren of a faithful, dedicated group of women who, through their magnificent auxiliary, raised funds that made it possible for us to finance auxiliary electric power, payroll, food, and other critical basic necessities.

Throughout the forties, there were only limited opportunities for Jewish doctors to take their patients to other hospitals. Unfortunately, they were just not welcome. The existence of Beth Israel Hospital and its standards over the years have changed this dramatically, so that today the barriers no longer exist and our people and our doctors have an open door in all the good hospitals.

When Beth Israel Hospital was built, all the money that was necessary was privately raised. Today, fortunately, with the changes that have taken place, we are being called upon for only $12 million toward a capital program of $81 million. What a difference this makes! This means we are called upon to raise only 15 per cent of the total cost of these facilities.

The authors of* Just What the Doctor Ordered, Barbara Morse (left) and Harriet Wilinsky Goodman, were honored in November at a special reception at the hospital for those who had participated in the preparation of the book. The new gourmet cookbook, published in October, 1982 by Holt, Rinehart and Winston, was developed at Beth Israel and has more than 300 recipes—each modified for many combinations of special diets—as well as considerable information on the fundamentals of sound nutrition. Order forms are available from Beth Israel Public Affairs, 330 Brookline Avenue, Boston, MA 02215.

Many of you here are sons and daughters of those pioneers, and active members of our community. You have inherited their love of our hospital and carried on with your contributions of both money and continuing efforts so that today Beth Israel Hospital is the source of great pride in this community.

We are blessed with the legacy of a second and third generation who continue to share their love, their interest, and their prosperity. Beth Israel represents a combination of the work and the leadership of fine people, the broad range of activities of all of our physicians, scientists, nurses, and other staff, and thousands and thousands of hours graciously given by a host of volunteers, both men and women. This is truly a hospital of the community and for the community—accepted here and throughout the medical world as a great institution.

An institution like ours could only have reached the eminent position we hold under brilliant and visionary leadership. This, Dr. Rabkin has provided in full measure.

Having been through many campaigns of the last sixty years, it has always been a great source of satisfaction and pride to me to find the self-renewing spirit of those who participate and the philanthropic hearts and minds of the people in this metropolitan area. There are almost 200,000 of us, and there is hardly any one of us or our families who have not been touched in some form by the Beth Israel Hospital.

Changes in the world seem to be developing more rapidly, yet for us there continues to be one constant—our feeling of compassion, our dedication to service, our ability to meet crisis after crisis, one challenge after another. Beth Israel has faced its share of these problems for the better part of a century. Isn't it a thrill as we rejoice in these great accomplishments and stature to look around at our wonderful family? Doesn't it give us great emotional satisfaction and a burning desire to continue to participate in this great and noble Beth Israel experience!

It has been my privilege also to be associated with other hospitals where I hear with regularity of the high regard in which Beth Israel is held. As I reminisce about the early years of the great oak that developed from our little acorn, I have an inner feeling of serenity. Our hospital is in good hands.

Excerpts from Remarks by Mitchell T. Rabkin, MD Beth Israel Annual Meeting November 7, 1982

"We're Determined to Stay Up Front"

In some respects, 1982 was a quiet year. There were no major cataclysms in personnel change, and what did take place showed that the organization was strong. Two division heads had just arrived in the department of medicine—Dr. Raj Goyal in gastroenterology and Dr. William Grossman in cardiovascular diseases, later to be joined by Dr. Donald Baim. A new surgeon joined the staff, Dr. Robert Demling, who heads the Longwood Area Trauma Center. Dr. William Silen worked at the laboratory bench during a six-month sabbatical leave, with Dr. Michael Steer serving as acting surgeon-in-chief. Later, Dr. Steer was to become associate chief of the service, as former associate chief Dr. Edwin Salzman took on half-time responsibilities as deputy editor of the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine. In nursing, Trish Gibbons headed for PhD studies, to be replaced by Ellen Liston as clinical director of medical nursing, and Jo-Anna Rorie came aboard to head our nurse-midwife group.

On the administrative side we were immensely proud of Richard Luskin who capped a decade at BI with an appointment as executive vice president at Children's Hospital Medical Center, a fine step forward in his career. We were equally proud that Sandra Fenwick, then the junior associate director, could be promoted forthwith to the senior position thereby vacated. We established the office of community relations, headed by Joan Mendelsohn—an effort reflecting the hospital's interest in community affairs, commitment to strengthen traditional hospital relationships and promote establishment and nurturing of new relationships appropriate to the hospital's mission and goals.

Already strong in Russian translation, we established a formal program with added strength in both Spanish language and Hispanic culture, headed by Laura Eastment.

In an organization of more than 2500 persons, many more instances of positive growth and change could be cited, had we the time.

More visible to the public were the physical changes. The year began with the opening of the Anna and Samuel Pinanski Video Production Center. Some of its output can be seen in the kiosk in the Feldberg Lobby.

The major event, of course, was receiving approval on Determination of Need for THE PROJECT, a major effort headed by Eugene Wallace, Frank Sullivan, David Dolins and his colleagues, David Freiman, and Rodger Daniels. The Charles A. Dana Research Building, already underway, was brought to completion, adding needed research space. One added benefit—a tribute to our architects, Martha and Elliot Rothman—has been the creation of a lobby and a sense of entry to both the Dana Building and also to the Slosberg-Landay Research Building, at the fourth floor entry common to both structures.

The HEFA bond issue, some generous capital gifts, the start of construction of the Reisman Building, and the addition to the Libby Building have already been noted. The canopy in front of the Yamins Building covers the new temporary entrance to the Berenson Emergency Unit; it will be in place for about two years as we put up the Northeast Building which is, incidentally, still available for naming. None of these achievements would have been possible without the tireless efforts of Norman Leventhal, Stanley Feldberg, Sidney Stoneman, Eliot Snider, George Katz, and many others—trustees, staff, our contractor, Philip Jackson; our consultants, Health Systems, Inc., and more.

Perhaps an even greater change took place in our relations with the world outside the hospital. We've enjoyed a growing colleagueship with sister institutions, fostered particularly with the advent of former BI medical staff member, Dr. H. Richard Nesson, as president of the Brigham and Women's Hospital, and Dr. J. Robert Buchanan —someone whom I have known during his years as head of Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago—as general director of the Massachusetts General Hospital. Incidentally, you will be pleased to know that former BI general director, Dr. Sidney Lee, has replaced Dr. Buchanan as head of Michael Reese.

At Harvard Medical School, Beth Israel finds itself increasingly in the midst of the Dean's councils, both scholarly and administrative. And at MASCO, the area-wide organization of our institutions which focuses on the provision of common nonmedical services and areawide planning, the latter activity has taken major steps forward as a result of strong leadership by Stanley Feldberg, who serves as BI representative on the MASCO board.

The most significant change, however, has been the growing interaction of BI and other hospitals with government and with the world of business. A seeming cornucopia of government restrictions—funding for care of the elderly, the poor, the patient with end-stage kidney disease; research support and training funds for tomorrow's health care personnel —these growing limitations take us to the State House and to Washington with increasing frequency. True, health care costs are rising, although the rate has changed little in recent years. Rather, it is—in my opinion—the economic downturn, the present recession, that has elicited the attention of American business and heightened the pressure on us. For example, the new legislation in Massachusetts, Chapter 372, emerged from a so-called coalition of industry, insurers, and health care professionals, but it was sparked by Massachusetts business. A bad bottom line in business means time to cut the expenses, and health care is a big component of those expenses.

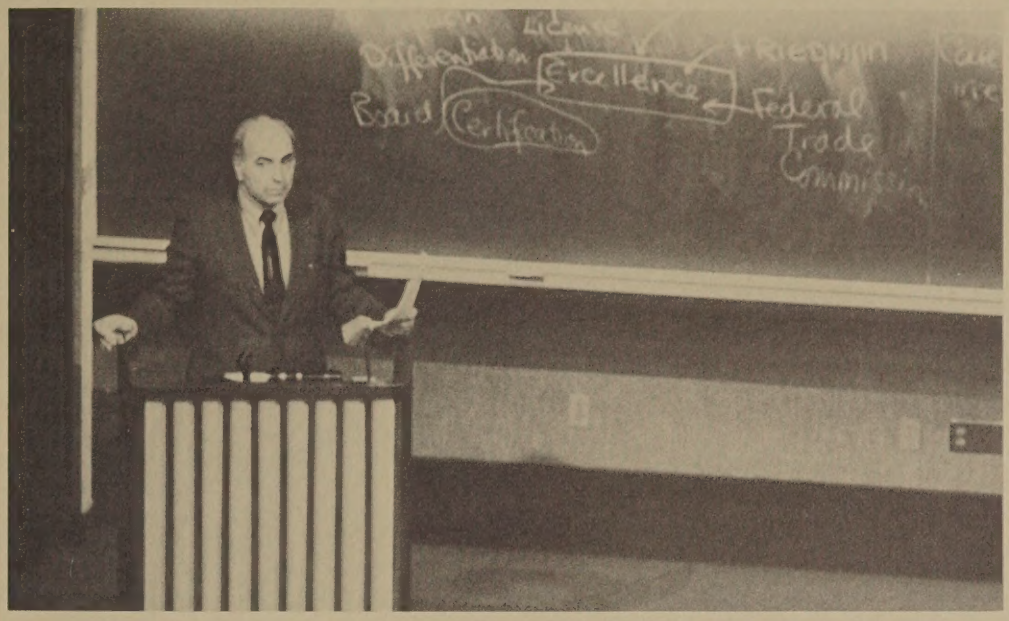
Chapter 372 is not the final answer, to be sure, in part because it exercises economic incentives toward the hospitals but few, if any, toward the physician or patient. Until all elements of a system of care and financing are influenced toward prudent use of resources, real control hasn't yet been achieved. Indeed we are cutting our budget at the hospital—this year's growth is about half of last year's rate—but that cannot go on year after year without serious consequences: new programs not established, limited growth or restriction in other programs of care and ultimately, a loss of convenience in care for patients and, in the end, a loss of quality of care. I hope we never get to that point, but please remember that the TV experts who state there will be no loss of quality are all people who have never been in the trenches. I am concerned as I look forward several years, unless there is some major change in our systems of care delivery and financing. Parenthetically, one example of an attempt to develop thoughtful systems change is the Commonwealth Health Care Corporation, an organization made up of the teaching hospitals and community health centers of Boston, now working to develop a viable way to care for the AFDC Medicaid population of the city, some 70,000 persons.

Thinking about Chapter 372, I would argue that its major achievement may have been to enhance the realization by business that corporate generosity in providing health care benefits in times of an expanding economy must inevitably trigger escalating health care costs which then add to the hard times of a business downturn. We are all in this together—there is a direct connection between what goes on in the corporate boardroom and what goes on in the hospital operating room. Like a spiderweb, when you pull a strand at one end, the vibrations go all around.

It looks like we shall continue to be involved in these outside activities. The old tripod of teaching, research, and patient care has given way to a new tripod—service (patient care), scholarship (teaching and research), and systems (delivery and financing of care). Today's Beth Israel is a different place than the BI of Dr. Charles Wilinsky, although its mission is little changed. Tomorrow's BI will be even more different. I'm reminded of the observation made by an old fur trapper in the Yukon territory. He said, "The scenery changes only for the lead dog." We're determined to stay up front.

In closing, I want to express my gratitude to Norman Leventhal for his leadership of Beth Israel over the past three years, and my warm welcome to Eliot Snider who begins his tenure as chairman in January. Many exciting things are in the wind, and my colleagues and I look forward to working with you as we head this institution toward the twenty-first century, with full appreciation of the changing scenery!



Dr. Daniel Federman

Federman Gives Thurman Lecture

Dr. Daniel Federman, Dean for Students and Alumni and Professor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School, was guest lecturer at Beth Israel's eighth annual Dr. Aaron Thurman Memorial Lecture. His talk, entitled "Does Ethics Just Happen," addressed the issues of the rapid evolution of medical knowledge, the increasing number of aged in the population, the technological complexity of medicine, health care costs, and the supply of health care providers.

The Thurman Lecture was established in 1975 by the family of the late Dr. Aaron Thurman who was one of the first surgeons associated with Beth Israel. Traditionally on the subject of medical ethics, the lecture was part of Seminars in Medicine at Beth Israel.

Coles is Sidel Lecturer

Prominent psychiatrist Robert Coles was the guest speaker at the 14th annual Dr. Nathan Sidel Lecture at Beth Israel. His topic was "A Reconsideration of Sinclair Lewis's Arrowsmith."

Dr. Coles, whose special interest is fieldwork in social psychiatry, is professor of psychiatry and medical humanities at Harvard Medical School, as well as a research psychiatrist for Harvard University Health Services.

The annual lecture, traditionally on the art of medicine, honors Dr. Nathan Sidel, consultant in medicine at Beth Israel. In recent years, speakers have included consumer activist Ralph Nader and health economist Dr. Eli Ginzberg.

Excerpts from Remarks by Norman B. Leventhal Beth Israel Annual Meeting November 7, 1982

"The Strengths of All Our Tomorrows"

As I look back over my three years as chairman of the board of trustees I have a sense of pride, fulfillment, and confidence for so many things: for the accomplishments of all of my predecessors; for the opportunity to work with our remarkable president, Dr. Mitchell Rabkin; for the support and good works of a dedicated and talented hospital staff; for the opportunity to be chairman during a period of great challenge and growth in the history of our hospital; for a community whose support is always strongest when strength is needed—and for the marvelous honor to serve the interests of that community and its "flagship" institution.

Truly this has been an extraordinary time, and it would have been a great privilege for anyone to serve in the role that I will soon leave.

Thanks to Stanley Feldberg, I did not begin from a standing start. The momentum he generated had much to do with our ability to meet the challenges of those next three years. His was a house in order, and I hope that those who follow will always be able to leave that great gift to their successors.

The hospital has marked many successful accomplishments over the recent past, and I want to mention just a few with which I was so fortunate to be associated.

The consolidation of the academic departments of medicine of the Beth Israel and Brigham and Women's Hospitals was and will be marked as a milestone for both institutions. It was a controversial and venturesome step, but one whose importance to the quality of research, teaching, and patient care in our hospital is now self-evident. Many people deserve credit for their roles in charting this difficult but necessary course, but particular note should be made of the vision and determination of Mitch Rabkin, Bill Silen, and Gene Braunwald.

The successful initiation of THE PROJECT is still another historic development about which you will hear more. Suffice it to say that it, too, was a difficult step to take—but one that had to be taken. THE PROJECT and the consolidated department of medicine will fare well in the eyes of our successors in the years to come—of this I am certain.

The first component of THE PROJECT—the Charles A. Dana Research Building—is officially "up and running" on time and on budget. The importance of research to a major teaching hospital such as ours cannot be overstated, and this building makes possible the continuing standards of excellence of biomedical science established by BI and its world-famous Harvard-Thorndike Laboratory.

THE PROJECT itself is also a major financial endeavor. A large bond issue was made possible by the support of a generous and concerned community, as well as by the sound fiscal management of the hospital administration, whose house is also clearly in order. Nowhere is this more evident than in the balance sheet of the fiscal year just ended, showing a positive cash flow from operations, and a record funding of depreciation.

"Success" and "optimism" are not words you hear often in hospital boardrooms these days. Nonetheless these are familiar words at Beth Israel, and there are many reasons for this, not the least of which is the quality and creative involvement of our lay leadership—the officers, the trustees, and the honorary trustees.

In large measure the hospital's success in navigating the difficult waters of our time is its remarkable staff—administrative, medical, nursing, technical, and support. By reason of their efforts and their excellence, our patients continue to receive the finest and most considerate care available anywhere.

It has not been an easy course. The past looks less difficult than the present largely because we know the outcome, and by and large, it did come out well. Over the years it took courage, foresight, and the adroit use of resources to make the major decisions to bring us here today.

It is the Jewish community that has made it possible for Beth Israel to have its special character, and it is to this same community that we will continue to turn for the support and the leadership that will bring us through the challenges of the years ahead. In recent years, we have seen an outward migration from the central city with ever increasing pressures on family life. Whatever Beth Israel can do to build new ties among the widespread community, and to enhance the strength of family and community, will be a great mitzvah not only to the hospital but to all who share its values. The strength of the hospital is the strength of the community and the strength of the community is the strength of the hospital.

There is a tradition of success at BI that goes back to those who made it possible in the first place; to the stalwart ladies who marched for funds in the 'teens and 'twenties; to the planners of the move to Brookline Avenue and the affiliation with Harvard Medical School; to the imaginative builders of the past few decades who made it possible for Beth Israel to grow with the times. This tradition brings us today to Beth Israel's role as a gem in the crown of our community, both serving its needs and offering to the larger communities of the nation and the world an example of excellence and leadership in medical care.

We all draw strength from the success of such landmark endeavors as the new Jewish Community Campus, and the continuing contributions to our well-being of Jewish Family and Children's Service, Jewish Community Housing for the elderly, and dozens of other priceless resources in the larger CJP family. Beth Israel Hospital has important ties with many of these providers, including within recent months the joining of forces with The Recuperative Center to help provide even better care to our community.

Thus it is with a sense of confidence in the future that I turn over the chairman's responsibilities to one who will carry on honorably and well, my colleague and my friend for over 30 years, Eliot Snider.

And as the leadership changes, we go into the future with a well-built foundation, a talented staff, a dedicated board, and a concerned community. These were our strengths in the past; they are our strengths today; and they will be the strengths of all our tomorrows.

Berenson Emergency Unit Temporary Entrance Opens

The recent opening of the temporary entrance to the Berenson Emergency Unit (EU), now relocated at the front of the Yamins Building on Brookline Avenue, signals the start of construction on the Northeast Building where the enlarged, renovated Berenson Emergency Unit will be located.

"The new space is pleasant, bright, and much larger than the previous entrance," said Kathy Carr, RN, head nurse of the EU. "It especially lends itself to a new system for triaging emergency patients in which the patient will see a nurse immediately upon arrival, rather than first making a stop at the registration desk."

The triage nurse, who makes the initial assessment regarding where and how immediately patients need to be seen, speaks to patients as they enter the unit, and also has the use of a triage room for more personal consultation. For patients who cannot be seen immediately, the triage room now allows the nurse, in collaboration with a physician, to initiate treatment such as scrubbing a wound or applying ice packs to a sprain.

Improvements have also been made at the registration area where partitions have been installed at the desk to ensure privacy.

"The benefit of having triage, registration, and the waiting area all in one space is that the triage nurse, who is familiar with the needs of the patients and their families, is immediately accessible during the waiting period," Carr said.

The temporary entrance will be in use until July 1984 when the Northeast Building, as yet unnamed, is scheduled for completion.

A Special Chanukah for Former BI Patient

For Dr. Bennett Solomon, principal of the Eli and Bessie Cohen Hillel Academy in Swampscott, Chanukah was observed for the second year in a row at Beth Israel. But this time he was a visitor, not a patient. And this time his students provided the entertainment at BI's annual Chanukah program to celebrate the eight-day Festival of Lights.

"I spent the whole month of December here in 1981," said Dr. Solomon, who was under the care of Dr. William Silen and Dr. Leslie Botnick for the removal of a tumor. "The doctors said I could come to the admitting area to see the Chanukah program which featured students from the Maimonides School in Brookline. I enjoyed it so much I suggested coming to BI this year with my students—to return the favor."

Seventeen students from the sixth, seventh, and eighth grades sang Chanukah songs to patients, visitors, and staff at the hospital. Dr. Solomon said he explained the Jewish value of bikur cholim (visiting the sick) to the students. "I told them that although they couldn't go into the rooms, they could cheer up patients by singing."

"BI is a remarkable place," Dr. Solomon said. "The care is outstanding, the nurses are the greatest. I'd like to come back with my students every year for the Chanukah program and make this a tradition."

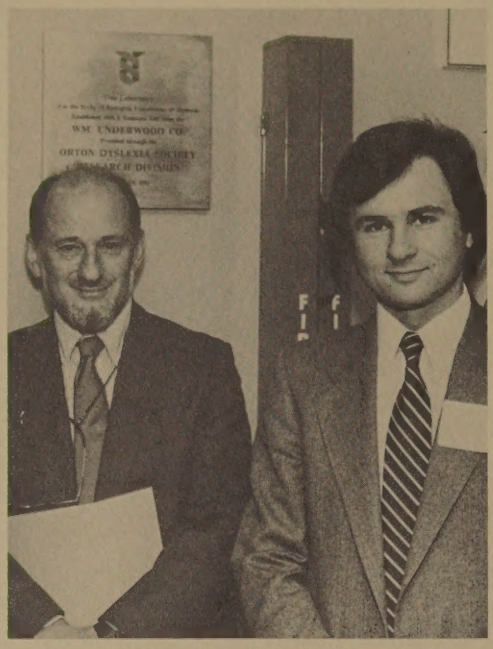
Dyslexia Lab Dedicated

A new laboratory that will be devoted primarily to studying dyslexia, a learning disorder which causes difficulty in handling words and symbols, was recently dedicated in the Charles A. Dana Research Building .

The establishment of the Laboratory for Research into the Biological Causes and Treatment of Dyslexia, located in the new Dana Building—the first completed phase of THE PROJECT—is a major step taken by Beth Israel toward understanding this disorder, which affects one in twelve children in the United States.

A grant from the Wm. Underwood Co. to the Orton Dyslexia Society aided in the establishment of the laboratory. The Orton Society, a scientific and educational association devoted to the study and treatment of individuals with dyslexia, designated the funds to equip and support the laboratory at Beth Israel.

At the laboratory dedication it was announced that the Orton Dyslexia Society has received an additional $50,000 grant toward further research on dyslexia. The funds, from the Powder River Corporation of Denver, a food company, will in turn be given to the new Beth Israel laboratory, under the direction of Dr. Albert Galaburda, a neurologist at Beth Israel and assistant professor of neurology at Harvard Medical School.



Dr. Norman Geschwind (left) and Dr. Albert Galaburda.

"Because differences between the dyslexic and the nondyslexic brain may be subtle, we must study the brain in fine detail," said Dr. Galaburda. "The nature of the research and preparation for microscopic study involves laborious methods in addition to expensive materials. These additional funds will be extremely helpful in this regard."

People suffering from dyslexia have difficulty in learning to read and write, although they are otherwise of normal intelligence, and often have superior talents in other areas.

A landmark study published by Galaburda and colleague Dr. Thomas Kemper of Boston University School of Medicine in 1979 showed that there are structural differences between the brains of dyslexic people and those of individuals without the disorder. This abnormality in structure results from a disturbance in brain formation during fetal life.

Another landmark study from Beth Israel, carried out by Dr. Norman Geschwind, neurologist-in-chief at Beth Israel and James Jackson Putnam Professor of Neurology at Harvard Medical School, and Dr. Peter Behan of Glasgow, Scotland, demonstrated that strongly left-handed individuals have not only a markedly increased incidence of dyslexia but also an elevated rate of migraine headaches and autoimmune disorders (in which the body may attack its own tissues). These studies have led to new theories and experimental approaches to left-handedness and causes of dyslexia.

"The studies in this laboratory have opened the way to research which can be targeted to understand more fully the cause of dyslexia. It is clearly possible that such understanding could lead to a biologically-based treatment," said Dr. Geschwind.

Stress Duress

The days of dreaming of a cure for all ailments are long gone. Yet if one component of daily living were obliterated, it might limit the onset of several diseases.

Stress.

Medical evidence indicates a strong relationship between stress and a variety of physical conditions. In some cases, stress is one of several factors that may cause an illness; in other cases, stress may be the direct cause. Of course, it is also known that some stress during daily living is natural and even productive.

Excess stress is the troublemaker.

"Many people can have far more control over their bodies than they recognize," according to Dr. Steven Locke, former director of Beth Israel's stress disorders program in the department of psychiatry.

"Anxiety, mild depression, or other inner emotional states may build up over time and first be experienced consciously in physical ways," says Locke. "By keeping a step ahead, people may prevent the development of stress-related diseases."

Conditions that occur more frequently during stressful periods are headaches, hypertension, peptic ulcers, eczema, backaches, asthma, insomnia, angina, irritable bowel syndrome, and more.

People who come to Beth Israel's stress disorders program usually have not been successful in alleviating stress through such routine methods as exercise, meditation, or a slower-paced lifestyle.

New patients in the program undergo examinations and answer questions about their medical histories. They also discuss their lifestyles and how they handle their emotions and personal conflicts.

"The physicians need to know what an average day in each patient's life is like to determine how stress may be playing a part," says Locke. "Patients have to be alert to the importance of telling their doctors about personal details of their lives which assist in determining whether there is a relationship between their lifestyle, stress, and disease."

In the stress disorders program, short-term treatment programs—usually six to eight weeks—are tailored to meet specific needs and remove or relieve stress-producing symptoms.

The program teaches biofeedback, hypnosis, behavior therapy, relaxation training, insight psychotherapy, and such other techniques as massage, time management, nutritional counseling, and exercises for relaxation.

For more details on Beth Israel's stress disorders program call 735-4745 or 735-4664.

Annual Report

Special Section Including Summary Statistics for Fiscal Year 1982

Ways of Giving

Beth Israel depends on the interest and support of a committed and generous community in its effort to deliver the highest quality in patient care, teaching, and research. Among the ways of supporting the hospital are the following:

Beth Israel Giving (BIG)
Beth Israel Giving is the hospital's annual campaign. Funds raised through BIG are used for the general operating expenses of the hospital. Contributions to the annual campaign are unrestricted, and they are used where the needs are the greatest.

There are three donor appreciation clubs.

The Century Club, newly established in fiscal year 1983, is designed to recognize the large and critical group of donors who contribute $100 - $499 to BIG. Members of the Century Club receive a subscription to the BI News, a quarterly publication which keeps donors updated on how their gifts are helping to support our patient care and research. Century Club members will be listed in the hospital's Annual Report.

The Associates Club, also established in fiscal year 1983, honors those important donors who contribute $500 -$999 to the annual campaign. Members of the Associates Club receive a complimentary copy of the best-selling Beth Israel cookbook, Just What the Doctor Ordered, by Harriet Wilinsky Goodman and Barbara Morse. This unique cookbook contains gourmet recipes for all—with versions of each recipe specially fashioned for those on medically-restricted diets. Members also receive the quarterly BI News, and their names will be listed in the hospital's Annual Report.

The Founders Club honors the hospital's major annual donors who, as of fiscal year 1983, give $1,000 or more. The Founders Club was founded in 1980. Founders Club members are recognized through the following special benefits:
- New Founders Club members receive a fine Beth Israel Hospital chair (with an engraved plaque bearing the donor's name) and the Founders Club necktie and silk scarf, each handsomely decorated with the hospital's insignia.
- New and sustaining members receive a personal invitation to the annual Founders Club dinner, held each spring at a celebrated Boston location. This dinner features distinguished physicians and other staff members exploring some of the most exciting medical progress and future research at this renowned Harvard teaching hospital.
- All members receive periodical issues of the BI News, and our medical magazine, Wellbeing, and their names will be listed in the hospital's Annual Report.

THE PROJECT — The Capital Campaign
THE PROJECT is a five-year building program to create vital facilities needed for the hospital to meet its goals of providing the warmest patient care and the highest quality in medical expertise. The major components of THE PROJECT are:

The Charles A. Dana Research Building—Dedicated in October, 1982, this five-story structure adds laboratory and teaching facilities for the hospital's biomedical research programs, and for the world-famous Harvard-Thorndike Laboratory.

The Reisman Building—Named in gratitude for a generous gift, the Reisman Building will be a four-story structure atop the Feldberg Building which will include a new labor and delivery floor, surgical and medical inpatient beds to replace those located in older hospital wings, and intensive care units.

The Northeast Building—Now available for naming, this four-story structure will include an enlarged and renovated Berenson Emergency Unit, a new radiation therapy department, a new and enlarged Morse Medical Intensive Care Unit, and expanded clinical laboratories and medical records library.

These structures, plus additional renovations to existing areas, will make possible a broad range of donor opportunities for naming facilities—from beds to buildings. When a facility is designated, a plaque is affixed to the facility, honoring the generosity of the donor. In addition, capital donors are listed in the hospital's Annual Report.

Endowment Funds
An Endowment Fund is established with a minimum gift of $1,000 to which future gifts of any size may be added at any time. The principal of each fund is invested and may not be used by the hospital unless specifically so directed by the donor, while the interest generated by the funds provides a continuing financial base on which the hospital can rely each year.

Endowment funds at Beth Israel support a wide variety of research efforts in all areas including cancer, heart disease, neurology, and intensive care. Income from a fund may be earmarked for an area of particular interest—in clinical care or teaching as well as research—or may be used by the hospital as needed. This is left to the discretion of the donor when establishing a fund.

Furthermore, funds may be named either for the donor or for a loved one. Endowment funds are cited yearly in the hospital's Annual Report, as are gifts made to an endowment fund during the year.

Planned Gifts
Beth Israel's Planned Giving Program provides various ways of making those special gifts which can offer immediate benefits to the donor and long-range benefits to both the donor and the hospital.

Planned gifts make it possible to help Beth Israel without parting with spendable income. Planned Giving options often give the donor an increase in spendable income, as well as income for life, an immediate tax benefit, avoidance of capital gains tax, and a possible reduction in costly estate taxes.

Special Funds
Special Funds are established through the generosity of individuals who wish to acknowledge a particular individual, medical department, or research area. A grateful patient may make a contribution in the name of a particular physician, to a specific medical area, for particular research, or in appreciation of nursing care.

Recognition Gifts
Many individuals choose to recognize an individual or an event by making a special gift to Beth Israel. A gift "in honor of" or "in memory of" someone may be designated to a specific hospital purpose such as heart research or the medical library, or it may be unrestricted. Those you wish to honor, or their families, will receive your warm wishes through a personal acknowledgment from Beth Israel.

Packets of "BI Giftix" or contribution envelopes are available to facilitate making these timely gifts.

Matching Gifts
Over 70 companies nationwide will match or even double their employees' contributions to Beth Israel. This helps not only the hospital, but the employee and corporation as well. Among the matching Massachusetts companies are: Boston Gas, Digital Equipment Corporation, General Cinema Corporation, GenRad Inc., Morgan Construction Company, and Polaroid Corporation. The personnel office at your company will have information on whether the company participates in the Matching Gift Program, and how your gift might be increased by their matching gift.

To make a tax-deductible contribution to Beth Israel at any time during the year, or for more information on any of Beth Israel's giving programs, please contact Helaine Miller, vice president, development, at 330 Brookline Avenue, Boston, MA 02215, or telephone 735-3600.

Beth Israel Giving (BIG)

Beth Israel Hospital depends on the generosity and support of its friends to maintain its quality of patient care, teaching, and research. During this fiscal year, September 27, 1981 through September 25, 1982, the individuals and organizations whose names appear below made contributions of $100 or more to the hospital through Beth Israel Giving (BIG)—our annual appeal.

Beth Israel Giving (BIG) Founders Club — Fiscal Year 1982

The BIG Founders Club, established in 1980, honors the hospital's major annual donors—for fiscal year 1982, those individuals who contributed a minimum of $750 and corporations and foundations who gave $1,000 or more. Planned Gifts

Beth Israel's Planned Giving program offers new opportunities for charitable support. It provides various ways of planned giving which offer immediate benefits to the donor and long-range benefits to both the donor and the hospital.

Planned Giving makes it possible for those who might want to help Beth Israel to do so without parting with spendable income. The Planned Giving options often give donors an increase in spendable income, as well as an income for life, an immediate tax deduction, an avoidance of capital gains tax, and a possible reduction in costly estate taxes.

Annual Meeting

"We are blessed with the legacy of a second and third generation who continue to share the love and the interest of the hospital's pioneers," Rabb told the audience of trustees, physicians, employees, families, and other friends of the hospital. "Beth Israel represents a combination of the work and the leadership of fine people, the broad range of activities of all our physicians, scientists, nurses, and other staff, and thousands and thousands of hours graciously given by a host of volunteers, both men and women. This is truly a hospital of the community and for the community —accepted here and throughout the medical world as a great institution."

"Isn't it a thrill, as we rejoice in the great accomplishments and stature to look around at our wonderful family?" Rabb said. "Doesn't it give us great emotional satisfaction and a burning desire to continue to participate in this great and noble Beth Israel experience!"

A highlight of the meeting was the presentation of a special citation to Viola R. Pinanski, honorary trustee, who was "an early organizer and the fourth president of the Beth Israel Women's Auxiliary, a trustee and honorary trustee for more than four decades, and has dedicated collectively more than a century of service to the hospital and its patients."

Certificates were presented to newly-elected honorary trustees Avram J. Goldberg, Harriet W. Goodman, Doris S. Lewis, Mitchell J. Marcus, and Howard Rubin.

New trustees elected at the meeting were Nancy Cahners, Ronald M. Druker, Lora Nemrow Estey, Orrie M. Friedman, Steven Grossman, Gerald J. Holtz, and Melvin Ross.

Elected officers of the board who will serve three-year terms are Eliot I. Snider, chairman; Philip J. Nexon, first vice chairman; Rosalind E. Gorin, George J. Katz, Edward H. Linde, and Frank A. Morse, vice chairmen; Jay E. Orlin, secretary; Allan S. Bufferd and Steven J. Cohen, assistant secretaries; Alan W. Rottenberg, treasurer; David Kosowsky and Henry T. Mann, assistant treasurers.

Esther Feldberg, president of the Women's Auxiliary, and Evan L. Weston, president of the Men's Associates, delivered reports of their organizations, and both presented the hospital with checks resulting from fundraising efforts.

Thirty-four physicians and dentists were honored at the meeting for their years of service, ranging from 25 to more than 50.

Viola R. Pinanski Honored — Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin, president of Beth Israel, presented Viola R. Pinanski (right) a special citation at the annual meeting. Mrs. Pinanski was honored for a combined total of a century of service to the hospital and to its Women's Auxiliary. Seated with Mrs. Pinanski is Mrs. Hyman Freedman.

In Memoriam

During the past year, Beth Israel lost several friends and colleagues whose passing the hospital mourned at the annual meeting. Said Chairman Eliot Snider, "They gave much of themselves to us personally and professionally. Although we are saddened by their loss, the memories of their friendship and of their contributions to our hospital are alive and with us today. Their good deeds stand as their enduring monuments." The names are:

Dr. Richard Brodie, Dr. Samuel Gilman, Dr. John Hoffman, and Dr. Harvey Peck, all of the medical staff; Samuel L. Slosberg and Theresa C. Whitman, honorary trustees; Donna Carp, LPN, of the nursing staff; and Aureliano Gende, an employee.

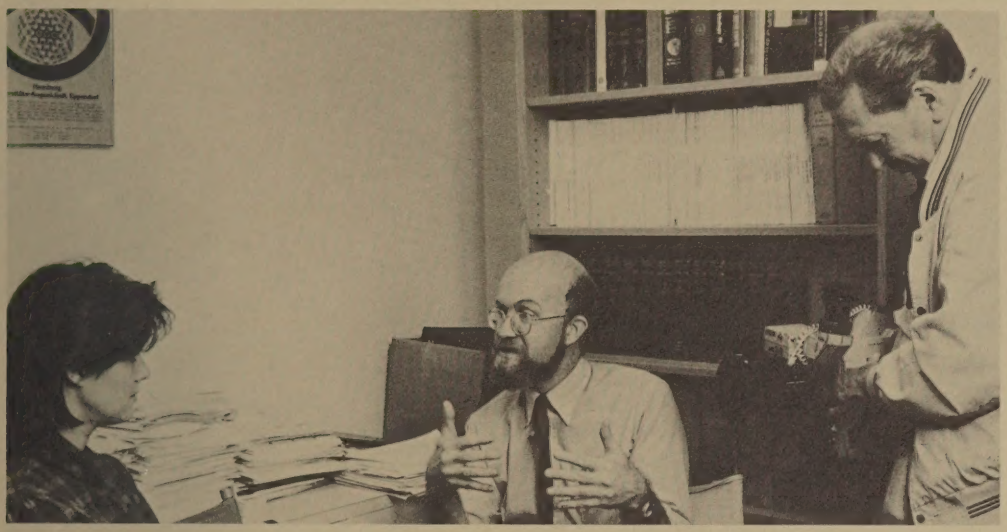
A research report concluding that "fibrocystic disease" may often be a normal condition in women received national attention through the wire services, CBS network radio, National Public Radio, and various syndicated columns. Principal author was Beth Israel surgeon Dr. Susan Love.

Dr. Mitchell T. Rabkin, president of Beth Israel, was interviewed by Lee McCarthy on "NBC Nightly News" on the cost of health care.

Betty Furness, of the NBC-TV "Today" show, interviewed plastic surgeon Dr. Joel Noe for a segment about nonsurgical facelifts.



Dr. Clyde Crumpacker, infectious diseases, was interviewed on WBZ-TV's "Eyewitness News" for a three-part special on herpes. Dr. Crumpacker was also featured in a Boston Globe article about Beth Israel's recently established Herpes Research Clinic.

A segment on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" titled "Mind Over Medicine" featured Dr. Herbert Benson (right) and Dr. Joan Borysenko (not pictured), behavioral medicine.

Tanya Hart, host of WBZ-TV's "Coming Together" interviewed Dr. Robert Demling, director of the Longwood Area Trauma Center and Beth Israel surgeon, about first aid. Here, Demling demonstrates for Hart the elevation of a cut to slow the bleeding.

BI's Architecture: More Than Meets the Eye

One look is all it takes to see that Beth Israel's buildings span a range of architectural styles. But with more than a glance, one can see that the hospital's architecture reflects its history, growth, and continuity.

"There are many practical considerations in designing buildings," explained architect Martha Rothman of the firm Martha L. Rothman-Eliot Paul Rothman, Inc., architects for THE PROJECT buildings. "Older buildings had simpler mechanical systems which didn't take up as much room as they do now. Older buildings were narrow, with patient rooms on each side, because they needed windows in every room for light and ventilation."

"Now we design buildings with skylights, borrowed lights—such as through-glass partitions—or artificial light, bringing light into the interior core. Mechanical ventilation systems bring air to the interior core," said Rothman. "Newer buildings are fatter with utility rooms, storage rooms, elevators, teaching areas, and conference rooms occupying the core."

Rothman continued, "We relate elements in new buildings to elements in older buildings. That is one way to give continuity to the overall site. For example, the use of brick and limestone on the exteriors of Beth Israel's buildings unifies the campus."

Changing architectural styles affect building design. From the classical details of the Gryzmish Building to the clear, functional lines of the Dana Building, Beth Israel is eclectic—a combination of diverse styles. But certain features stand out.

The first buildings constructed on the site in 1928—Gryzmish, Rose, the administration building (no longer in existence), and part of Kirstein—are reminiscent of classical architecture. The arched doorway of Kirstein's former main entrance on Brookline Avenue, as well as the columns built into the windows on the second floor above that doorway, are Romanesque features. The detailed brickwork at the rooflines of Kirstein, Rose, and Gryzmish are also classical Romanesque elements.

Staff Activities

Ann V. Als, MD, radiology, and Ivo Obrez, MD, a visiting professor from Yugoslavia in the radiology department, spoke on "Angiographic Characteristics of Intracoronary Fibrinolysis" at a May meeting of the European Society of Cardiovascular Radiology in London, England.

Dr. Als is also coordinator of the Women's Academic Physicians Network at Harvard Medical School.

Kenneth A. Arndt, MD, chief of dermatology, gave two lectures at the second American-International Conference on Clinical Dermatology in Copenhagen. The September conference was sponsored in part by the Danish Dermatological Society and was attended by nearly 300 physicians.

BI's Architecture

The Rabb Building, completed in 1966, changed the axis of the hospital. With a curved facade rather than the classic rectilinear orientation, Rabb illustrates the movement in architecture to more flowing, less ornamented structures with cleaner, more distinct lines. The slate front also marks a trend to more natural materials and massive forms to create more density.

The movement to more massive forms is particularly evident in the Feldberg Building, completed in 1976.

Using the same light-colored brick for the Feldberg Building was a major decision for the hospital. In the past, buildings were constructed so that their brick supported them. Today, buildings are constructed with steel or concrete support, so that in Feldberg, brick is the building's "skin" rather than a structural element. But to give continuity to the buildings of the hospital, the Feldberg Building was designed with a brick veneer, or curtain, over the steel structure. The large windows of Feldberg—and soon of the Reisman Building atop Feldberg—enhance the structure's interior light.

"We kept the form of these windows the same as those in the older building—they're 'punched' windows, openings in the brick," Rothman explained.

View of Beth Israel today, as construction progresses on THE PROJECT.

The Reisman Building will also be capped with limestone to incorporate the material of Feldberg's prominent entrance canopy.

That limestone theme will be repeated at the entrance of the Northeast Building, now under construction. A limestone canopy, with the same proportions and height as the main entrance canopy on the Feldberg Building, will mark the new emergency room entrance.

"Part of the challenge in designing the new buildings was building vertically in a limited space without ruining the low scale of Brookline Avenue," said Rothman. "With the Reisman and Northeast Buildings set back from the street, we are able to maintain the scale along Brookline Avenue."
